Stable and plentiful ground water flows are necessary for healthy trout habitat.

Demands on the ground water resources in Wisconsin are growing each year with detrimental results for our cold water fisheries.

Whereas there is no statute protecting the ground water flows for trout streams, therefore

Be it resolved, the Conservation Congress at its annual meeting held in Portage County on April 10, 2006, recommends that appropriate action be taken to provide and protect a sufficient ground water flow to maintain a healthy habitat in all trout streams.
